INTRODUCTION

You know that feeling when you're doing something really weird—like dancing around in your pj's with a broomstick to a song that hasn't been popular for seven years—while your partner watches on, and you realize that you don't even have a hint of embarrassment in you? This happens to me often.

First, I think, “Should I be embarrassed?”

Then, I think, “Hmm, no. This is me. And I am so lucky to be with someone who not only puts up with this but also embraces it, encourages it.”

And my dance moves are bad so that's saying something.

Being yourself with your partner—and embracing your partner's quirks—is such an important part of a relationship and is the very foundation for all the moments. The silly moments, the quiet moments, the broomstick-dancing moments, and everything in between. No matter who you are, being the truest form of yourself and letting your guard down is what makes all these memories what they are.

This book is for you guys. For all the love you share, all the vulnerability you show, and all the realness you let flow freely. A book for all the moments in love, in pajamas, and, of course, both! We hope you have a comfy spot to sit and a cozy pair of pj's while you open this book and read.

Love,
Catana & John

Catana Chetwynd is a self-taught traditional artist and the enthusiastic author of Catana Comics. She grew up in Saratoga Springs, New York, where she spent her time creating art and pursuing an education in psychology until accidentally stumbling into the world of comics. Not only is her fiancé, John, the daily inspiration for her drawings, but he was also the one who suggested a comic series about their relationship in the first place. Thanks to his idea and his inspiring daily antics, Catana was able to pursue her childhood dream of being a cartoonist. She currently lives on the East Coast with John and their tiny, angry dog, Murph.
